TALK IS CHEAP, so is any kind of merchandise when bought at the right place. I for one do not believe in talking too much, but put my time rather to some better use. I have been in Reno since the town started, and have tried to do my best for my patrons. I do not say down with a monopoly, as there is no such a thing in my line. But what I do say is, that I have, and always will, give dollar for dollar, to which my numerous customers can testify. Thanking the public for kind patronage for the past, and soliciting the same for the future.
I am respectfully,

WINCHEL & CUNNINGHAM,

CALIFORNIA'S VOTE.

The California State election comes off next Wednesday, and the nearer the day approaches the more hopes have we that not alone will Perkins be elected Governor, but that the Republican State ticket will win with him. It deserves to. It is the best ticket in the field. The Republicans will elect the most of the Congressmen. Pacheco and Page we put down as certain of victory. McKenna has a good show in the Third District. Davis also has a good show in San Francisco, but Barbour, the Workmen's nominee, is very liable to have a plurality, as the chances are greatly in favor of the Workmen sweeping the city. Perkins will make as good an Executive as California has ever had, and we sincerely trust that he will be chosen Governor.

WILLING PATRIOTS.

We are surprised at the modesty of Dennis McCarthy and Arthur (sweet Arthur) McEwen, of the Virginia Chronicle. These eminent reformers are in hopes that the next Legislature of Nevada will be Democratic, so that Dennis can be elevated to the U. S. Senate, and Arthur elected Porter of the Senate, as against Clem Berry the regular nominee. So mote it be.

THE NEXT CENSUS.

A Washington dispatch says that preparations for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States in 1880, and for the collection of valuable statistics is going forward as rapidly as possible. The law under which this work is to be carried on provides that the Secretary of the Interior, on or before the first day of March, 1880, shall appoint one or more Supervisors of Census of each State, but the whole number in the States and Territories shall not exceed 150. These Supervisors shall not appoint the enumerators for the various counties of the State. Any county exceeding 4,000 in population shall be divided into districts, so that no district shall contain more than 4,000 inhabitants. These enumerators shall begin their duties on the first Monday in June, 1880, thus requiring the work to be done in less than thirty days. The compensation will be two cents for each inhabitant, two cents for each death reported, ten cents for each farm and fifteen cents for each establishment of productive industry. Application for appointment as enumerators must be addressed to the Supervisors of the State when appointed.

Scott Lord, who took charge of the case for the opponents of the will made by Vanderbilt, received a fee of $100,000. This was good pay. G. F. Comstock, Esq., of Syracuse, N. Y., received $50,000 from Wm. H. Vanderbilt, the chief legatee of his father, for legal advice; and Henry S. Clinton, Esq., of New York City, has presented a bill for $250,000 for professional services in behalf of Wm. H. Vanderbilt—which William thinks is a trifle too much. Lawyer Clinton undoubtedly believes

"There is a tide in the affairs of men," which flows but once, and that this is his only chance to get a quarter of a million dollars from a single client.

Count Andrassy, who has just retired from the head of the Austrian Ministry, is one of the most remarkable statesmen in Europe. A few years ago he was a refugee from Hungary, with a price set upon his head. He shared the joys and misfortunes of the Magyar revolution, in 1848, and was the steadfast friend of Kossuth and other Hungarian patriots.

Andrassy has frequently come in contact with Prince Bismarck, of Germany,—in various diplomatic struggles—and always defended the position of Austria with signal ability. Emperor Francis Joseph loses a strong counselor in the retirement of his late Minister-in-Chief.

The United States Grand Jury has found an indictment against E. J. Baldwin for violating the internal revenue laws by refilling old packages with spirits without cancelling the stamps and selling the same at his store in Los Angeles county. He is also charged with failing to make proper entries in his books as required by law.

The Eureka Sentinel will hereafter issue a weekly edition. The Sentinel is deservedly prosperous.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

(Regular Correspondence.)

LONDON, Aug. 9, 1879.

Not only in England but in other parts of Europe are the effects of American competition beginning to be indirectly felt.

AMERICAN IMPORTS

Are largely diminishing the external demand for the cereals grown in the fertile plains of Southern Russia—so much that in some districts land is said to be going out of cultivation simply because the raising of crops has ceased to be remunerative. Cholera, plague and diphtheria are raging with great severity in many of the eastern and southern provinces, while others are afflicted by a ruinous visitation of locusts, and cattle plague in a very fatal form is widespread. The vitality and recuperative power of any great community are marvellous, but it is scarcely possible that Russia can pass through such a concurrence of calamities without experiencing some startling social or political upheaval. There is no more striking evidence of the superficiality of the veneer of

WESTERN CIVILIZATION

Which overlays the Oriental barbarism that is the actual condition of the mass of Russian society than the savagery with which the contest between the Government and the revolutionary party is being carried on. On the one hand the infamous attempt made a few months ago on the life of the Czar seems to have provoked the authorities to surpass anything previously known in the way of repressive vigor. The prisons are everywhere filled with people, most of whom have been arrested on mere suspicion at the arbitrary discretion of the military governors of provinces. In the large towns the police regulations are so numerous and so minute that to people accustomed to the institutions of free countries like ours, existence under them would be simply intolerable. Among recent items of news from Russia are such incidents as the summary expulsion from Moscow, by the order of the Governor General, of

ALL THE PAKENBROKERS

And insurers in the city; the prohibition by General Todleben, Governor of Odessa, of all collections of money for any professedly charitable or religious object without official sanction; a demand on the railway companies to furnish to the authorities lists of the Christian and surnames of all persons in their employ, accompanied by an order not to take anybody into their service without formal official permission previously obtained; and the infliction of heavy penalties on persons who, even in provincial towns, have dared to let lodgings to strangers without giving information to the police. On their part, the revolutionists do not appear to be discouraged by the frantic exertions and appalling severities of the Government. They have abandoned for the time the practice of assassinating objectionable officials; but the method of warfare they have substituted for it is even more terrible. They have resorted to

WHOLESALE INCENDIARISM.

Within the past two months entire towns have been devastated by fires. An official return states the number of conflagrations throughout the Empire in the single month of June to have been 3,501, causing damage to the extent of £1,200,000. Only about a seventh of these fires are attributed to incendiaries; but it may be safely assumed that this is far too low an estimate. The most startling instance of the audacity of the incendiaries, and of the fierce hatred of the old order of things which animates them, has only just been reported. A few days ago an attempt was made in broad daylight to burn down the Kremlin at Moscow—a place that has been hitherto regarded as sacred to patriotic Russians. There is, in fact, war to the knife between the Russian revolutionists and the Government, and it seems to be only too apparent that all the repressive powers the latter can bring into play are inadequate to the task of crushing the enemies of the existing system.

THE SUMMER VACATION.

The Third month of Summer is about ended, and while many who can afford it are hurrying away from town to find rest at the seaside or in the country, there are many more who cannot go away, are at home bewailing their fortune, and wishing that they were so situated that they, too, might join in the Summer idling. While it is well for us all to have a season of recreation from our labors there is often very little reason in the manner in which the Summer vacation is spent and still less in the grumblings of those who are obliged to remain at home during the Summer months. Many of the discomforts of Summer are imaginary; and many more are of our own creation. If one is determined to make himself thoroughly miserable, nothing is more easily accomplished whether the weather be warm or cold, or whether he be in town or rusticating in the country. On the other hand, it is possible to make one's self comfortable and contented in town or country even during the hottest days of Summer. Those of us who are so constituted as to be able to stand continuous work the year round without being fatigued; and when mid-Summer comes many of us are well worn out. Then we need, first of all, rest or the nearest approach to rest possible. There are very few callings in which some reductions in the hours of labor will often accomplish as much as a whole season of cessation from work. If one is so circumstanced that he can remain in absolute quiet for a season, it is much better. Many persons, however, will leave off laborious work at home only to renew it in the wearying labor of a long railway journey, or in the dissipations of a fashionable watering place, and return home more weary than when they went away. Those whose mind is concentrated on one thing the year round need a change, as well as rest. The mind must be distracted from its every day employment, and in this change from our daily routine that makes a holiday, though it may be spent in fatiguing travel, is beneficial. The fashionables who during the Winter wear themselves out at balls and dinners cannot expect to be benefited by repeating the same thing at the sea shore. The change of air and scene is beneficial in itself, but the transferring the same worry and work to another locality, does not help the work of recuperation. But the man who labors in the counting room the greater part of the year, or the woman worried and busied by the anxious cares of the household month after month, may gain the greatest benefit from anything that will remove him from those cares, be it only for a short time. It is surprising what a short holiday will do to drive away weariness, give a new aspect to life, and give new strength and spirit for one's daily work. And it is well that it is so for the number who are so blessed in the possession of worldly goods which will enable them to pass the Summer at some watering place very small. On the other hand, the great mass of people can with difficulty obtain a week, or even a single day, for some invigorating trip. Summer traveling has been so systematized, and so cheapened by competition, that most everyone can afford a day or two for a trip to the shore or country, where they can have a change and pure air. The laborer can find time and means to go down the river for a day, and the recreation will be beneficial. The more fortunate can stay as long as time and the money at their disposal will allow. It is one of the peculiarities of Nature that our enjoyment of a vacation is apt to be in proportion to shortness its and infrequency. The great end of Summer vacations is, to get away and leave business and household cares out of sight and out of mind for once in the year. The best time for the vacation depends of course on each one's circumstances. But whether we have a vacation to look forward to or look back to, it would be better while at our work to take life calmly, and not worry and fret simply because the weather is warm. X.

In 1866 a Troy (N. Y.) woman obtained a divorce from her husband, but in the Fall of the same year she yielded to his entreaties, and for the sake of their child she remarried him. They lived happily together until last month, when they learned from a threatened prosecution for bigamy that their marriage was void, because the husband had no right to marry anyone during her life. On the 25th of July, in the presence of friends and a lawyer, they signed papers agreeing to live separate and apart, he promising to pay her $15 a week for her support, and to keep the child during its minority, allowing the woman to see her whenever and as often as she pleased. It is a queer law that interferes to punish parties in such a case.

The ex-Khedive of Egypt doesn't seem to take the loss of a principality seriously to heart. He is living lazily and luxuriously on board a frigate at anchor in the Bay of Naples. His harem, containing twelve women, is in one of the cabins, while his servants and eunuchs occupy the hold. The old man is supplied with the best and most palatable food that can be obtained; has the newspapers delivered to him regularly, and passes his time reading, sleeping and eating, he is not depressed in spirits, his only apparent concern being as to his personal comfort.

Mr. Jacobson grew too old to work his farm at Waukon, Iowa, and gave it to his son, expecting to retain a home on it, but soon found himself in the poor house. After a few weeks of pauper life, broken in health and heart, the old man returned afoot to the farm; but the son refused to receive him, and he wandered into the woods, where his dead body was found.

WHITE PINE'S PLACERS.

An Excellent Opportunity for Capital.

(From the Ward Reflex.)

People in general who chance to live in some other State, or some other county in this State, have come to the unfavorable conclusion that nothing good can come out of White Pine county; but notwithstanding these adverse opinions it has more diversified resources than any county in the State. Its placers would have been attractive to a 40-er when gold dust was the circulating medium. More nuggets and the largest too have been taken out of Osceola in the past two years than in any mining camp on the Pacific Coast in the past ten years, and further, that there are people in this State and California who think it impossible for paying placers to exist in Nevada. Had that thirty-six hundred-dollar nugget been placed on exhibition in San Francisco all would have joined in saying it came from some place in California. This is for the exclusive benefit of the incredulous and the croakers. Ward has been one of the main outlets for the gold dust taken out in Osceola, but not more than one-third has been shipped through this place. Much of it has gone through Cherry Creek, Salt Lake and Pioche, some through private hands, which cannot be arrived at, and much still remains in the hands of miners at Osceola. Of late we have learned, and not on good authority, that the miners at Osceola can dig up, if they want to, many thousands of dollars in safe keeping, they having no particular use for their treasure at present. With sufficient capital to bring in water the placers of Osceola could be made to give up millions, to say nothing of what the gold ledges will yield when developed, accompanied by milling facilities to meet the ore product. We have the trouble to ascertain how much in dust and bullion has been shipped from Osceola since June 27th, 1877, up to August 1st, 1879, though the express office at this place, and had the amount to be $41,312. Ph. Felsenthal received $13,400 in dust, a large portion of which did not go through the express office, and does not figure in the above. He also received considerable bullion but just how much, we did not learn. At least $60,000 has reached this place in various ways. That diverted into other channels would bring the total product up to $150,000. This has been taken out with but comparatively little water, and a rattlesnap of a mill (five stamps), which has been more of a detriment to the camp than anything else.

At the meeting of the Hastings Debut Society Saturday evening G. Strauss read the criticism. The question debated was: "Resolved, That the great public highways should be owned and controlled by the government," having special reference to railroads. Session and Darcy on the affirmative show the overshadowing vista arising from the accumulation of so much capital and power in the hands of a few men, and held that no remedy could possibly be satisfactory until the government absolutely owned the entire railroad interest. Hutchinson and McKee, on the negative, granted the evils and acknowledged the right of the government to control railroads. But they thought the remedy proposed was not a good one, inasmuch as it would introduce new evils worse, perhaps, than the old. Among these new evils were mentioned the necessary great increase in civil service, the opportunities for jobbing afforded by giving government officials control of a complicated system, involving the handling of hundreds of millions of dollars yearly, the certainty that the government could not run the railroads as cheaply and satisfactorily as private corporations, and finally the red tape and delay that would occur in the building of new roads, and the consequent retardation in the development of new districts. President Pomeroy decided for the negative.—[S. F. Post.]

Gamblers, like other people, have their lucky days, and when a professional feels that he has "conquered the dealer," he will sometimes stake his pile. Sometimes heavy bets are made out of pure recklessness. The spirit of "make or break" is so strong that if a man has a dollar, he will risk it in some way so as to have two or none. A man went into a gambling saloon in Leadville one night, and after watching the play a few minutes, said: "I bet a thousand that the ace wins." The man meant what he said, and the dealer sent for the proprietor of the bank, who scratched his head and said that the bank would take a fourth of the bet. Wouldn't some of the gentlemen like to make up the rest? "I'll take $250 of it," said a man leaning against the bar. "I'll take $250 more," said another, and in three minutes $2,000 lay on the table and the dealer took up the cards. He dealt three or four turns and the ace came lower. The partners took $250 apiece, and the man who had risked so much on a single card walked off smiling and as unconcerned as could be.

A few days ago, while a teamster named Matt, Ellingwood was driving a four-horse team up a steep grade between Saratoga and Summit, a drove of pigs ran across the road in front of his horses, and frightened them beyond control. They plunged over the embankment, and the driver, becoming entangled in the lines, was dragged about fifty feet. He had his skull fractured by coming in contact with a rock, and one leg was broken below the knee. He was not found until the following day, and then taken to his home in Santa Cruz. His life is despaired of.

A probable fatal accident occurred at Bridgeport, about six miles west of Suisun, on Saturday. A young man named Marion Stiltz caught his jumper in the jack-wheel of a horse-power, and was whirled around the shaft several times. One arm is broken in three places, one leg is broken, and he is likely hurt internally. Three ribs are also broken.

THE ENCHANTED SINGER.

On a lovely Summer evening, many years ago, I was passing through one of the streets of Berne, on the way to my lodgings, when my attention was attracted by the sound of a piano evidently an Erard, and I involuntarily paused to listen.

Some one with a masterly touch was idly preluding and undulating, when suddenly the stilt cadences ceased, and then sounded out clearly and distinctly the first few notes of that delicious Chopin Nocturne in B major, almost the last one written by him; first, the running arpeggio, blossoming into the suspended chord, and then the theme, with its longing, its questioning and its patient resignation. I had often and often played this delicious nocturne, but I now perceived that I had hitherto failed utterly, to comprehend its inner meaning. Under the fingers of the unseen musician, it became to me a revelation. Moved irresistibly by the power, the feeling, the loving tenderness displayed in the rendering of the composition, I forgot time, place, everything, and wept.

Suddenly I was seized with a curiosity to see this wonderful artist. Until that moment I had scarcely thought to notice any of the dwellings, or indeed any of the surroundings, for my whole soul had been absorbed in the exquisite music. I now proceeded to examine the houses near me, with the purpose of obtaining if possibly a glimpse of the pianist. Directly before me stood one of those quaint, curious structures peculiar to old Swiss towns, and from its interior evidently came the full, clear notes of the Erard.

I hurried across the narrow street, placed myself near a window and managed to obtain such a position as would enable me to command a view of the interior without danger of being seen by any of the inmates. At the grand piano, which stood at the farther extremity of the apartment, was seated a young girl, whose long, flowing hair was just touched with gold by the last rays of the setting sun; there was no other person in the room, and the fair artist had evidently yielded to the inspiration of the hour and was playing "twilight music."

In the meantime the maiden, unconscious that any listener lingered near, had not ceased to play. Under her deft fingers there breathed out another Nocturne, that lovely prelude in F sharp minor, three heavenly "Gondoliers," by Mendelssohn; Schumann's "Des Abend," and, finally, that lovely Nocturne in E minor, which was written by Chopin when he was yet a mere boy. It had now grown quite dark, and the outlines of the artist's head were scarcely distinguishable in the gloom which pervaded the apartment; then there was a pause, a hush, and just as the moon was rising above the tops of the houses, softly, quietly, but distinctly rippled along the opening bars of the so-called "Moonlight" sonata, with its wealth of sadness and unavailing regret. This wonderful girl played with the most perfect precision and delicacy of touch, and every note of the wavelike accompaniment was distinct, though veiled, while the theme, full and clear, rose above it in its marvelous beauty.

How long my enchantment might have lasted I do not know, for after the conclusion of the first movement of the sonata the music ceased, and although I waited for some time in vague expectancy, all was silent.

The next evening, and for many subsequent evenings, I was at my post, and was never disappointed. Sometimes the music was fiery, impassioned, with a wild, tempestuous rush of emotion; sometimes sad and tender yet always the last thing would be the dreamy Nocturne in B which I had heard on the first evening.

During the Summer events took place in England which made it necessary that I should visit that country in the early autumn. I did so, but remained in Great Britain only twenty days, and having transacted the business which had called me from Switzerland, made all my arrangements for returning to Berne, and to my idle artist life there.

The evening before my departure for the continent I had retired at an early hour, and had suffered much from an unaccountable uneasiness and restlessness, and from a strange depression of spirits, which drove sleep from my eyes. I had at last, however, fallen into a sort of heavy, lethargic doze, when suddenly I was, as it seemed, wide awake and listening intently. Above, around and about me I heard that well remembered Nocturne in B. Twice did the ethereal, harp-like harmony float and vibrate through the apartment, and then, with a long, climbing arpeggio, the music melted away.

Gloomy forebodings and presentiments filled my soul, and I felt—although I knew not why—that some horrible calamity had befallen the girl-artist. The next morning I was on my way to Switzerland.

On my arrival at Berne I made inquiries about her, and learned that on the very night when I had heard the weird, mysterious music, she had fallen into the Anar, and had been swept away by its rapid current. After playing at twilight, as was her custom, she had gone out for a walk upon the bank of the river, and incautiously ventured too near the stream, and had fallen before any assistance could possibly reach her. All these facts I learned from the garulous old cobbler who occupied the house adjoining that in which poor Constance had lived with her aged parents. I left Berne the next day, and have never revisited that city; and although many years have elapsed since the sad occurrence which I have related, I never play the Nocturne without thinking of Constance and those Summer evenings in the old Swiss town.—[Music Trade Review.]

In a Hartford court the other day, two young women were protesting their desire to reform when their lawyer turned to them, and said in a whisper loud enough to be heard by a Court reporter: "stop your noise and sing in your tears." The prisoners indulged in a loud, heart-broken wail, and tears trickled down their cheeks, when the heart of the justice was overcome, and he let the girls go. The lawyer was a good judge of human nature.

LOVE IN A MILK WAGON.

A Driver's Flame Dimmed by Marriage and Revived by Separation.

(From the New-York Herald, Aug. 17.)

A romantic story was told in the Harlem police court yesterday. The complainant in the case, Mrs. James McEvoy, was a well preserved lady of forty-five, and the defendant, her husband, a gentleman five years her senior. From the statement of the former it would appear that she herself is the proprietress of a milk route, employing several teams and a number of assistants. Yet, though she has amassed a competency, she still serves with her own hands a few favored customers, holding the reins behind her favorite pony with no little skill. The lady was a widow when five children up to October last, when during her rounds she first met Mr. McEvoy and with true feminine instinct, it is said, managed to draw from him an avowal of love. On November 4, 1878, they were married, and every thing at the time pointed to a long and happy union. But daily intercourse seemed to chill the affections of the newly wedded pair, and total alienation was the final result. One month after marriage articles of separation were signed. Although blessed with fortune and good health, Mr. McEvoy, who is a well-to-do cattle drover, could not easily forget his first love, and separation from the idol of his affections seemed to revive the old flame. He did his best to extinguish it, but in vain. The dreary winter wore away, and the gentle robin and tuneful frog betokened the approach of Spring, and when at last Summer came Mr. McEvoy lied him to Saratoga, and it is said, added to his own wealth by diminishing that of a faro bank. Then he returned to New York, and on the 11th day of August, as the sun was beginning to peep from over the tallest trees, at Mount Morris square he took a standing position at the corner of Second avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-eighth street. The thoroughfare was quite deserted, but soon he heard a rolling of wheels followed by the appearance of Mrs. McEvoy's little pony, drawing its gentle mistress and a couple cans of milk. Stopping the docile beast the lover leaned into the wagon, and on bended knees poured into the astonished occupant's ear the story of his revived affection. Mrs. McEvoy, however, refused to listen and insisted upon driving on. Then, as the story goes, Mr. McEvoy drew, or made a pretence of drawing, a revolver, and threatened the woman with instant death. Matters were beginning to assume a serious aspect when the pony, who had become restive, sprang forward, leaving the gentleman in the street. Yesterday Mrs. McEvoy had her husband arrested and arraigned. He did not make a very clear statement in reply to the questioning of Justice Wheeler and intimated that "he wanted to forget the past and resume his former relations with his wife." A fine of $10 was imposed and the prisoner committed in default of the usual bond for good behavior.

Commencing October 1st don't fail to have your photograph taken during his stay with us. *
